Baby born at base hospital dead of sepsis – Aniyua An infant born at the base hospital at Lungi International Airport has died from sepsis. The report was reported by The Daily Star on Friday. The report also said the baby's death has compounded the woes of the family after the father's parents were told by the base hospital that the baby had been sick. The mother's father has since complained that the child died after a struggle in delivery. When the family presented themselves at Lungi General Hospital, their story did not go down well with the medical staff. The mother has since been taken for a second opinion to a hospital in the capital, Abuja. Responding to questions by the Daily Star, the base hospital, in a statement, said that it records of all babies who die at the base hospital are properly archived at the Lungi airport hospital where they are buried. “The hospital also noted the cause of the death was sepsis,” the statement said. “Sepsis is not a common disease among the people in Mafara and the surrounding areas,” it said. On the deceased child, the statement said the child died three days after birth and said the autopsy report was on Wednesday. The statement said the child died three days after birth and said the autopsy report was on Wednesday. “The autopsy report found no external injury. As the child was a premature baby, an autopsy was performed to ascertain the cause of death. The autopsy report found no external injury,” it said. It said the report also said the child was not breast fed, but it was not clear why. The statement, which was signed by Dr John Chukwu, the hospital’s head of pathology, said the hospital was “not in possession of the autopsy report and a re-autopsy is not necessary.” Nevin Stewart Nevin Lyle Stewart (born June 6, 1952 in Salt Lake
