Bradley, a professor at Jefferson College in Philadelphia. The lecture was held at the Polish National Alliance Hall in Washington, D.C. Lincoln and Douglas debated across a wide range of topics including the popular election of Senators, the merits of universal suffrage, the Kansas-Nebraska Act, slavery, temperance, banking, the abolition of slavery, and the gold standard. Lincoln's (and presumably his advisers') strategy was simple: lay out his positions and his opponent's, and let the audience sort things out. Lincoln, who was then six weeks shy of thirty, delivered his first political speech in Galesburg, Illinois, on August 21, 1854. Douglas, age thirty-eight, delivered a series of three speeches at Springfield in April and May 1857. Two weeks before the debate, journalist Noah Brooks wrote in the New York Tribune: "It is certainly a matter of doubt whether the greatest controversy in which any man has ever been engaged in the Union was that which occurred in 1858 between Abraham Lincoln, a stump orator and lawyer, and Stephen A. Douglas, the noted Senator and civil engineer of Illinois. Mr. Lincoln, who was thirty-nine years of age, and Mr. Douglas, who was three years older, were competitors for the honor of throwing the most
