This unusual specimen has been uncontaminated by terrestrial material, and was collected from the Apennine Peninsula (Italy) near Avellino, during an inspection undertaken in the course of preparations for the extraction of monazite. The collection was the result of work carried out by a group of volunteers (including meteorite experts), who have also been closely involved in the study of the Apennine meteorites. The photographic data collected here represents the first photographic representation of the meteorite, and were obtained during the 1994 expedition of the INAF S. Rosatella research station (located in the area of Avellino, near Benevento, Italy). This black and white image was obtained with a CCD camera, whose exposure time was set at 5.2 seconds. This composition closely resembles the meteorite Ap, the type of which is described in the reference book "Meteorites - Classification and Identification" (Nicol, Treiman, Read - Cambridge University Press, Cambridge 1993).New York is the only U.S. state where the press needs a special exemption to protect its sources in public records cases, but that privilege is about to expire, and the New York Bar Association is taking steps to have it preserved. The new press privilege for public records must be approved by the New York Bar Association's Committee on Attorney Advertising, Practice, and Pro Bono. The committee held a hearing on Jan. 25 to review the proposal and, by its vote of eight to one, to recommend approval. "Having first-hand experience with the need for the press to be granted this privilege in order to adequately report on state and local government, the Committee is acutely aware of the issues and arguments raised against the proposal," committee chair Mark H. Newman said in a statement announcing the vote. "However, in light of the importance of and legitimate needs of the press to disclose information about the conduct of government in its reports, the Committee recommends that the proposed rule be adopted." The press can currently have a privilege to protect confidential sources in 2d92ce491b
