And, she was a total star. The actress auditioned for a role in Saturday Night Live on Saturday, in a bizarre story that made The Wrap and Buzzfeed, and that then ricocheted around the internet. On Saturday, Dunst was flying in First Class on a red-eye flight from Florida to New York. During the flight, the actress started having a "heart attack," a clearly shaken Dunst later told Access Hollywood. So, she rang for the flight attendant who instructed her to contact the pilot and request a seat change. [embedded content] Dunst's doctor was contacted and they decided she should fly first class. As it turns out, Dunst, and everyone else on board with her, had a reservation for seats aboard First Class. "I know I had a reservation, I know that I paid for that. I know I had a confirmation," Dunst told Access. "That part of the story is true. I am very happy with the outcome because it does give some story to something that I have been thinking about." Dunst admitted that she had a nervous breakdown as the flight attendant, Clayton Croyle, was cleaning up after her. Croyle, who is from New Zealand and was competing for the role, had initially assumed she was fine, she said. "I wanted Clayton to understand how I was and that I needed to go into my bag and get my pills," Dunst told Access. "He was cleaning up stuff and he got this look on his face and [I said], 'Clayton, I'm not feeling well.'" [He said], 'Can I help?' and I said, 'No, I think I just need 3e33713323
