Alterations of the reticuloendothelial system after experimental renal ischemia. The reticuloendothelial system (RES) plays a central role in host defense by serving as the first line of defense against bacterial invasion. In this study the alterations in RES activity after experimental renal ischemia were investigated. Ischemia was induced in juvenile pigs by clamping the renal artery for 45 minutes. Four different retention times were selected at decreasing intervals after ischemia: 3, 12, 18, and 24 hours. Animals were subsequently killed with a lethal intravenous dose of sodium pentobarbital. Under anesthesia, the kidneys were removed, and the tissue samples for cell isolation were taken. Mononuclear cells were isolated by density gradient centrifugation (pancoll; Biochrom AG, Berlin, Germany). The leukocytes were incubated with Evans blue dye (EBD; 4% w/v in 0.9% NaCl) for the assessment of mononuclear cell phagocytic activity. The EBD clearance rate was determined by measuring the rate of decrease in dye concentration in the supernatant. Macrophage phagocytosis was also measured. The fluorescence of monocytes was significantly increased after 18 hours of ischemia. There was also a significant increase in EBD clearance capacity of mononuclear phagocytes after 18 hours of ischemia. These results indicate that phagocytic activity of RES cells is not only increased at the time of ischemia but also after a prolonged period of reperfusion. Understanding and treating the patient with sickle cell anemia. Sickle cell anemia is a hemoglobin disorder that affects over 100,000 persons in the United States. The diagnosis is not difficult, but treatment is. Management of sickle cell anemia revolves around the accurate and prompt diagnosis and assessment of the severity of disease. The proper diagnosis allows for individualized therapies, which vary with severity. Key therapies are hydration, transfusion, and exchange transfusion.
