Selective conversion of steroids with carbon monoxide at metal nanoparticles/Nafion-modified electrodes. Herein, we show that Nafion-modified electrodes (Nafion@NiO NPs) can serve as a good platform for selective conversion of steroids. The morphology of Nafion was analyzed by scanning electron microscopy. The electrochemical properties of Nafion@NiO NPs were measured by cyclic voltammetry. The electrocatalytic activity of Nafion@NiO NPs towards the electrooxidation of different steroids was investigated. The oxidation potentials and corresponding reaction pathways of different steroids on Nafion@NiO NPs were found to be stable and Gan-e Sadat Gan-e Sadat (, also Romanized as Gan-e Sādāt and Gān Sādāt; also known as Sādāt and Sāzādāt) is a village in Baz Kia Gurab Rural District, in the Central District of Lahijan County, Gilan Province, Iran. At the 2006 census, its population was 39, in 10 families. References Category: Populated places in Lahijan County [Clinical and experimental aspects of small bowel volvulus]. One hundred and one cases of small bowel obstruction due to the mechanical obstruction of the narrow by intestinal malrotation in human and obstruction due to peristaltic dyskinesia in a rat model were studied. In the clinical series, the anatomical and clinical diagnosis, surgical treatment and early morbidity were analyzed. In the experimental series, it was determined that the mechanism of the volvulus is the shift of the mesentery toward the left side with more peristalsis in the small intestine and the stomach, followed by shortening of the ligament of Treitz and the formation of the volvulus.
