If you're lucky, your cable provider will have support for at least one OTA (Over-the-Air) broadcaster in your area. Even if it's not OTA, there are probably cable companies who offer broadcast channels for their customers, but require you to buy an external antenna. They likely won't do this for all the available channels, and probably won't give you all of the broadcast channels, so it is hard to recommend which one to get. It's also likely that the cable company will not be able to give you an open channel (because that would require someone else to pay them for the broadcast rights) - the antenna companies all have
